Excerpt: . . . he again said, abruptly, as if a fresh thought had struck him: --Send back a surgeon to that sick man, with instructions to report his condition to me. This, also, was done. The cavalcade went on a few minutes longer, when the General gave a third order: -- Have the commissary leave a few rations, that the woman and her husband need not suffer. The family was protected and fed. In due time the invalid was cured, and Grant furnished them with free transportation to the North. That night our investing lines in the rear of Vicksburg were formed, in a half circle, from the river above almost to the river below, Sherman holding the right, McPherson the center, and McClernand the left. Haines Bluff was already evacuated, and our gun-boats and transports from Youngs Point steamed up the Yazoo. Before midnight, wagon loads of provision...
