In its original form the lathe was doubtless a very simple affair, probably differing but little from the old pole-lathe, which may still now and then be met with in a village carpenter s shop. Fig. 97 shows the principle of its construction, and renders intelligible how, without any metalwork whatever with the exception of the two dead centre screws and a tool-rest (the latter omitted in the Fig.), it is possible to construct a lathe which would at least render much assistance in the manufacture of a bedpost. It is obvious that this machine is not adapted either for accurate or speedy work, the backward and forward motion obliging the turner to waste one-half of his time whilst the spring lath (whence the name lathe) is raising the treadle, and thereby producing a revolution in the wrong direction. The introduction of a crank and flywheel, by which the reciprocating motion of the foot is converted into one of continuous rotation, and the replacement of one of the dead centres by a headstock capable of supporting a mandril with a pulley upon it, were...
